When two architectural styles collide

Astrid Gutzeit Nyström

This floor lamp combines two different architectural styles, Brutalism and Jugendstil. On the one hand, characteristic architectural elements that were strongly influenced by Brutalism can be found within the construction. The material concrete has an additional load-bearing effect and is a homage to the use of raw, industrial materials. The lighting itself, on the other hand, is inspired by the decorative patterns of Jugendstil. In addition, the copper detail is found as an allusion to the use of metal as a decorative element.
